Pipeline contract awarded

The San Diego County Water Authority has awarded the first construction contract for the La Mesa/Lemon Grove Pipeline project (Pipeline 4 extension, Phase 1) to J.F. Shea Co. of Walnut, CA.

The contract for Specification 423 of the project is for $43,141,000. The job is expected to last 2 1/2 years.

Three other project specifications also will be awarded for the La Mesa/Lemon Grove Pipeline. Bids will open August 27 for Specification 421; the other two contracts will be advertised soon. Total estimated cost of the project is $130 million.

Under Specification 423, Shea will construct five miles of 96-inch welded steel pipeline. The pipeline will begin near State Route 94 in northern Lemon Grove and extend through a portion of the City of San Diego and across Spring Valley, terminating at the Sweetwater Reservoir.

When completed, the La Mesa/Lemon Grove Pipeline will extend nearly 8.5 miles from the Mission Gorge area in Santee to Sweetwater Reservoir, tunneling through Cowles Mountain and traversing south on Lake Murray Blvd., 70th Street and finally entering Lemon Grove on Massachusetts Avenue.

Combined with the Lower Otay Pipeline (Pipeline 4 Extension, Phase II) which will extend from Sweetwater Reservoir to Lower Otay Reservoir, the pipeline will complete a project enabling delivery of both treated and untreated water to the South County.

Both phases will be constructed simultaneously, with an anticipated completion date of September, 1993.

This pipeline is part of the Authority's capital improvement program, an ongoing repair plan to enhance and expand the water distribution system and increase countywide water storage capacity through construction or expansion of reservoirs.

by Paul Treske

The Helix Water District is actively planning for a sixth consecutive year of drought in 1992, but the efforts toward conservation by its customers make its prospect not nearly so severe as in 1991.

HWD manager Bob Friedgen credits a variety of factors besides conservation as adding to the less-threatening picture for next year. He credits the very mild summer thus far, as well as the near inch of rain gained from the surprise July rainstorm for brightening the picture.

"People have responded much better than we expected," states Friedgen, "and as a result, we are going into next year with good water storage in our reservoirs."

HWD figures indicate a conservation rate of well over 20 percent, compared to last year with the storm week showing over 50 percent less usage than the comparable week in 1990.

Ongoing programs aimed at supporting the current conservation success include the District's toilet retrofit program and a water audit program in which trained individuals will meet with extensive water users, measure the nature of their water use, and make recommendations for conservation.

All is not bright for Southern California, however, according to Friedgen. As a whole, he notes, the area lacks adequate water storage facilities. As a result, there is frequently more water in the feeding aqueducts than can be handled by Southern California Water Districts. Friedgen adds that no relief to California can be expected from such water-rich states as Washington or Oregon.

Also coming from the State and, already adopted by the San Diego County Water Authority, is a "Memo of Understanding" on "Best Management Practices," which establishes optimum water management practices.

Friedgen describes the "Memo of Understanding" as "a benchmark for estimating reliable savings for areas which utilize waters from the San Francisco Bay/Delta area." It is expected that the HWD will adopt the memo at its next meeting.

Lemon Grove has its day at the races

Residents of Lemon Grove will be able to attend the races for free on Sunday, August 17, when Del Mar Thoroughbred Club salutes the City as part of its 1991 Community Days program.

A race will be named in honor of the City of Lemon Grove. Mayor Jim Dorman will be in attendance for the occasion, making a presentation to the owners of the winning horse, following the Lemon Grove Community Day race. A special gate will be set up at the entrance to the track to handle the free admissions. To claim free entry on Lemon Grove Community Day, residents are required to produce proof of residency in the form of a driver's license or other valid identification showing a Lemon Grove address. Race-goers under age 18 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian. Admission includes access to the Grandstand and the festive infield areas, as well as to the saddling paddock and walking ring, where the horses are paraded before they go out on the track.

Patrons wishing to upgrade to a clubhouse admission may do so for $2.50. Reserved grandstand and clubhouse seats may be purchased for $3.50 either in advance or on race day. The day is also the date of the 35th running of the $300,000 Grade 1 Ramona Handicap, the track's top contest for fillies and mares (three-year-olds and up).

For more information, call Mary or Ruth at 755-1141; for reserved ticket information, call 481-1207.

Chamber of Commerce welcomes 24K

It was a grand opening for 24K Auto Body & Paint at 7636B North Avenue which brought Mayor Jim Dorman and Miss Lemon Grove, Dancia Yacuzzo, to the celebration last Friday. Owner Luis Rzeslawski (center) is flanked by his wife and daughter. Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce members were on hand to extend a friendly welcome to this new business.

'Duke' is coming to town

U.S. Congressman Randy "Duke" Cunningham (R-San Diego) invites 44th District constituents to attend his Lemon Grove town meeting Saturday, August 24, at 3 p.m. at the Lemon Grove Community Center, 3146 School Lane. He will discuss his work in Washington and in the 44th District, and listen to ideas from residents. Cunningham's staff will be available to help cut the "red tape" concerning Social Security and Veterans benefits, or offer help with other federal agency problems residents may be experiencing.

Lemon Grove's Lena turns 90

Country Hills resident Lena Lange and grandson Gary Gomes.

Lena Lange celebrated her 90th birthday July 19 with a party at Country Hills Residential Care Center. On hand for the celebration were several family members including grandson Gary Gomes.

She and her late husband, Emil, moved to Lemon Grove about 30 years ago. Lang was born in Poland and grew up in Canada and Oregon. She has worked as a wedding dress seamstress and raised a son and a daughter. Family members traveled from Long Island, N.Y. and elsewhere to attend the party.

Senate scholarship offered

A $2,000 scholarship and a trip to Washington D.C. are being offered to high school juniors and seniors who hold elective offices in California schools as part of the United States Senate Youth Program.

This program, established in 1962 and funded through the William Randolph Hearst Foundation, honors students for their leadership, community involvement and academic achievement.

Interested and eligible students are nominated by school principals who will receive application information through district offices by the end of this month. Each high school, with the help of a local selection committee, identifies one candidate to represent the school. The statewide screening of applicants will occur in October; two delegates and two alternates for California will be selected by State Superintendent Public Instruction Bill Honig, and announcement of the winners will be made by the U.S. Senate Advisory Committee in December.

Those seeking information regarding applications should contact their local high school principal.

Local karate kids shine

The Lemon Grove Karate Studio reaped in awards at Ed Parker's Memorial 28th Annual International Karate Championships held at the Long Beach Sports Arena.

This championship attracts competitors from around the world ranging in age from five years to adult and includes both novices and professionals. Such persons as Chuck Norris and Jeff Speakman frequent this annual August tournament.

On August 3, under the coaching of third-degree black belt instructor David Stewart, four youths placed in their respective divisions.

Jerry Ingrande, 13, placed second in the Teen Brown Blue Division, 13-15 years of age, Freestyle (sparring). Jerry Stewart, 12, placed third in the Junior Brown Belt Division for 12 year olds, freestyle.

Lucas Bagnelk, 12, placed second in the Blue Belt Division, 12, freestyle. Rick Mange, 10, placed second in the Purple Belt Division, 9-11 year olds, freestyle.

Grossmont College to be first in area to offer food service management program

Grossmont College will be the first Southern California campus to offer a diploma in food service management. The program is designed with the cooperation of the National Restaurant Association's Educational Foundation. The Educational Foundation includes scholarship monies for some individuals participating in the diploma program. Admission for fall classes at Grossmont continues through August 16, with classes beginning August 26. For more information on the food service management program, call Evan Enowitz at 465-1700, ext. 327.

Relief Society needs volunteers

The Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society has an urgent need for volunteers in a variety of areas. As little as three hours a week is acceptable for becoming a volunteer. The hospital visitor program at the Naval Hospital presents such an opportunity on weekends or evenings. Volunteers are also needed in the thrift shops and offices. Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

Class Reunion

Without getting into Frank Andrews' style of writing, I'm compelled to relate a recent experience. The purpose is one of comparison and appreciation, and it is hoped that such will be evident. They say, "You can't go home again," but that is not altogether true. You can journey back through a sort of time travel of nostalgia and memory to relive the pleasantries of youth.

The Class of '41, Union High School, Grand Rapids, Michigan, recently held its 50th reunion, and I was there.

When we stepped off the plane, we were instantly reacquainted with the heat and humidity of a Michigan July. An outdoor steam bath would be a good description, and we were soaked from the inside out, as completely as if we had been caught in a rainstorm. Even the socks were wet, and the shoes squished. There was no four o'clock cooling breeze as in San Diego, and it was just as hot at midnight as at noon. Remembrance has a way of keeping the good times clear and recallable, while the bad things are somehow mercifully faded away, and we quickly remember why we migrated to California.

The greenery is always impressive, and while driving through the countryside, it is strikingly obvious what a difference rainfall can make. The corn that should be a bit over knee-high was tasseled out and looked ready to cut. Walking along one of the many lakes, we marveled at the trees and grass and encountered another reason for our heading West. They still have two sizes of mosquitoes - the smaller ones which eat you on the spot for fear that the large ones will come along and take you away from them. They use Avon's "Skin So Soft" bath oil as a repellent back there, but there are just too many of the blood-thirsty creatures to cope with. You must run from the house down to the lake and dive in, to keep them from bleeding you white. We were treated to a thunderstorm with the lightning and thunder claps occurring simultaneously at what seems just above the chimney tops, and they literally can shake one out of bed. The residents back there express such fear of our earthquakes and yet, they don't realize that their windstorms do far more damage, and more often.

Seeing classmates that have aged 50 years, was a bittersweet experience. Some are in wheelchairs or need walkers, yet others look very good and can still "cut a rug" as in the old days at the high school gym. Old girlfriends can take one back to a prom, or a night when Glenn Miller came to town, and for an instant, you are young again. I was singularly proud that my Jackie outshone them all, and I found that she is still the best, after all. Each had the opportunity to tell, via the PA system, what kind of a life he or she had experienced over the past half-century. Some were long-winded, but most bragged up their families. Of the 380 graduates, there are almost 100 who are gone or unaccounted for; we had close to 200 show up from all corners of the country. It was unanimous that we will all do it again in 2001.

Visiting the scenes of one's youth can be fun. At the Jerry Ford Museum, I saw an old picture of the front of the Ford Paint Co. where I dropped a morning newspaper for two years. Young Jerry Ford worked there summers when he was home from U of M and used to haggle with me over the 12 cents weekly charge for the paper, I never realized at the time that he would be President.

On Being 'Bob'

At a recent birthday, I received a very unique present. It was the "Bob Book."

Since the publication will probably not enjoy extensive distribution (Carls or Freds or Howards will not buy it), I will explain its purpose. It describes in depth the state of "Bob-ism," the meaning of Bob, and, is a celebration of the ultimate "okay guy." The world according to Bob is documented in these pages with quotes from notable Bobs, an intensive survey of Bobs' preferences, and attempts to answer the earth-shaking question, "Why I'm Bob." They failed to include "yours truly" in the book, so to give anyone interested a look into this Bob, here goes, for what it's worth.

Why I'm Bob: Named after the Scotch poet (Robert Burns), I turned Robert to Bob after the critiques of my attempts at poetry. Anyway, I'm Irish.

What being Bob means: Having a name everyone can spell, one that spells the same backwards and forwards, and one a book was written about.

Bad Bobs I have known: Hasn't happened yet.

My great weekend: Attending my high school 50th reunion recently and meeting old schoolmates and reveling in the fact that an old girlfriend hasn't weathered as well as my first choice, and still, my current "steady."

I'm handy at: Most anything that is not remotely connected with mathematics or electricity.

Behavior I dislike: Overly-voluble people who repeat and rephrase already stated ideas to great lengths. Also, candidates for public office who promise impossible accomplishments without substantive solutions and must be elected to find out that they cannot deliver.

My hell on earth: The thought that this wonderful life and all of the joys that have been bestowed upon my family will not last forever.

Who I trust: Everyone who does not actually have a gun sticking in my ribs.

Who I do not trust: Most politicians and some cocker spaniels.

Most important things to know about women: They are soft, they smell good and are all beautiful. Also, it is futile for any man to think that he can outwit one ... it's impossible.

Boyhood dream: To be a veterinarian and to marry the most beautiful girl in the world who would give me five wonderful children.

Free advice: Do not be discouraged in any endeavor. You can be anything that you want to be if you are willing to work for it. Of course, with the exception of the latter part of my boyhood dream, which has already been taken by me.

Here are a few of my "favorites:"

Favorite Book: "Captain Blood." Favorite Movie: "High Noon." Favorite Newspaper: "The Lemon Grove Review." Favorite Magazine: "The Smithsonian." Favorite Song: "Anchors Aweigh." Favorite Cereal: Corn meal mush. Favorite Car: '66 Mustang. Favorite Sandwich: Corned beef on rye. Favorite Sport: ESPN et al. Favorite Clothes: Old loafers, old slacks, and a Michigan State T-shirt. Favorite Town: Lemon Grove, Ca.

There are few downsides to being a Bob - being with two other "Bobs" in a group of four; large dogs seem to love "Bobs" and jump up into our laps with slobbery kisses; and, being prolific means lots of diaper changing.

Over the years, Robert (Bob) has been one of the most popular names... which, says it all, doesn't it?

Councilman Burns will discuss matters of concern to our readers. If you have questions for Dr. Burns, send them to P.O. Box BB, Lemon Grove, CA 91946.

If you are a 'Bob,' you should subscribe today.

Letter to the editor

Re: Growth

Dear Editor:

Councilman Bob Burns' pro-growth article of 8/8/91 that population growth brings prosperity to a region contradicts a few facts such as why the most economically advanced countries such as Switzerland, Finland, Sweden, and other European countries have had slow population growth for decades. And that greatest economic miracle, Japan, achieved it with one of the lowest population growth rates and zero immigration. Conversely, the world's most impoverished countries happen to have the world's highest population growth rates.

Then Bob continues with how to governmentally deal with problems brought about by his desirable scenario by implementing a "Paradise Tax" on "everyone."

So where's the hole in Bob's theory? It's called economic growth. A large population is prerequisite for an urban and industrial society insofar as a large labor force and a buying industrial market is necessary, but a large population does not necessarily imply a prosperous urban society. Population growth without economic growth will not precipitate prosperous urban growth. On the other hand, economic growth without population growth will result in prosperous urban growth.

It is necessary for economic growth, or per capita production, to increase at a higher rate than population growth rates in order for there to be any net increase in productivity, i.e. standard of living; if the converse were true, consumption would exceed production and the society would never leave its impoverished existence.

Where population growth exceeds per capita production, standards of living are reduced. There is no savings, no capital formation to invest in new production, and eventually we would return directly to the Stone Age.

Inflation may be the factor which muddled Bob's thinking that population growth equals prosperity. As for the need for more government funding, he's probably right, but government funding can only be a function of the economy - not the population. So we will either have an impoverished government or a healthy one. Lately it's been impoverished.

The Hostages and Charlie Brown

"American hostage is freed as hopes rise for other captives"

This headline in Monday's L.A. Times says it all. The terrorists have given us an inch and we have once again woven the whole cloth out of it.

Those familiar with Charles Schultz's comic strip, "Peanuts," are familiar with his standard autumn story line. Lucy holds out a football and tells Charlie Brown that she will hold it so he can place kick it. Charlie reminds her that the last 50 times this has happened, she has pulled the ball away at the last instant and left him flat. Once again, she convinces him of her sincerity; he believes her, runs to kick the ball and she once again pulls it away.

If Schultz has touched upon a simple human truth, then we are Charlie Brown and the Islamic Jihad is Lucy. In the past year, a half-dozen rumors have floated from some mysterious Middle-Eastern source of imminent hostage release, and each time, our news media trumpeted this news in headlines. Each time, TV sought out hostage families for heartbreakingly hopeful interviews and each time, nothing came of it.

This time, finally something, but what? A picture of Terry Anderson is sent with a message, and there are headlines again. TV rushes to talk to Anderson's sister, Peggy Sey who expresses hope. Then, they release British hostage John McCarthy and say an American is coming, and send a picture of Joseph Cicippio. His family is interviewed and expresses hope ... and out comes Edward Tracy.

Now, we are told that the ball is in Israel's court and vague suggestions are made that if they release 375 prisoners (including some pretty high-powered international terrorists) something good might happen. Israel, of course, has been through this before. Seven months ago, they heard the same siren song and released 45 prisoners as a goodwill gesture. The response? Silence. Now, they're asking that the Shiite extremists release, dead or alive, seven Israeli military captives they have held. Can we expect Israel to turn over their prisoners without some response to their issues. And, if they do, do we honestly believe that this will lead to the release of all the hostages?

For those with short memories, it was not too long ago that the bargain was, the hostages for 17 convicted terrorists held by Kuwait. The war solved that problem, but then led to a new and different demand with the hostages still dangled as bait.

What now? Something may indeed work out but don't hold your breath, despite all the optimism. It is cruel to think of hostages as one being more or less important than the other, but that is the reality of the situation. The terrorists are releasing the "B" team and hanging onto the "A" team of Terry Anderson, Thomas Sutherland and Terry Waite. How long will they be held and what new demands are still to be made for their release. It is incredibly sad and ironic that Anderson will probably be the last released at some far away future date, only because the unflinching efforts of his sister placed him in the limelight.

In the meantime, the American media dances to the terrorist tune and bleeds false expectation all over the pages and airwaves with each blip coming from the captors. Like Charlie Brown, we apparently have yet to learn a little healthy skepticism. Of course, with Charlie and Lucy, it's only a football. Here, we are dealing with the hopes, dreams and prayers of achingly anxious wives, parents, brothers and sisters.

So, stay tuned for "news at 11," but if someone offers to hold a football for you to kick, tell them you'd rather punt.

Harnessing the best that is within you

by Joseph Walker

It wasn't that my first semester at college was a total waste academically. My roommate, Dave, and I learned a lot together.

For example:

- We learned that if you're really careful you can squirt an entire can of shaving cream into a large balloon, and that one such balloon, accurately dropped from a fifth-floor window, is sufficient to cover a 1968 Volkswagen Beetle.

- We learned that peas have the perfect density for long-distance bombing in a cafeteria food fight, while applesauce doesn't.

- We learned that it takes about two seconds for heavily amplified sound to travel a quarter of a mile. (We conducted this experiment ourselves, using Dave's stereo, four speakers facing out our dorm window toward campus and the long scream from "Won't Get Fooled Again," by "The Who." Two seconds after we cranked it up, heads started turning on campus. We even made the college newspaper the next day under the headline, "Mysterious Sound Baffles Security.")

Unfortunately, I didn't take physics that semester, so I didn't get any credit for all our our exhaustive research. Which is at least consistent, I guess, because I didn't get much credit in any of the classes I did take, either.

Not that I wanted to fail - I studied - when there wasn't anything else to do.

When I showed Dad my first collegiate grade report, I expected a flash of anger and frustration. He was, after all, footing the bill for what appeared to be a fairly bogus educational adventure. He was entitled to at least a little righteous indignation.

"Dad, let me explain ... I said, opening a speech I had been practicing for days. He held up a hand to stop me. "You don't need to explain anything," he said calmly. "I know that the first semester of college can be tough." Then he glanced at the report again. "I just wasn't expecting it to be this tough."

I could see the disappointment in his eyes - eyes that had always been filled with pride at every high school accomplishment and success. "The thing that concerns me most," he said, "is the fact that you didn't even try. These grades don't tell me that you're not smart enough to succeed in college. They tell me that you didn't put forth any effort. And, if you don't learn anything else from your first semester, you're going to learn that if a thing is worth doing at all, it's worth giving your best effort. Anything less than that is a waste of time, money and talent." With that, he tore my grade report in half and tossed it in the garbage can. He started to leave, then stopped and turned to face me once more. "You've got one semester to see what you can do when you really try, he said. "Aren't you curious to know how far your best effort can take you?"

As it turned out, I was. Don't get me wrong, I didn't become a Rhodes Scholar or anything like that. But, I tried harder and my grades improved significantly. And, every once in a while, I attacked a project with my whole heart and soul and I found out that my best effort was usually pretty good - if I do say so, myself.

Of course, I'm no different than a lot of folks. Many of us try to cruise through life, expending only as much energy as needed to keep ourselves afloat. Only, occasionally when circumstances thrust themselves upon us, do we achieve the level of excellence of which we are capable. At such times, we often amaze ourselves with what we are able to accomplish when we really, really try.

And then, we slip back into calm waters and resume floating.

Life saves its greatest rewards for those who have the strength and courage to escape the comfort zone. They aren't necessarily more talented or more capable or even luckier than anyone else. They've just learned how to harness the best that is within them. They refuse to settle for "adequate" when they are capable of "superb." And, they understand that the only thing that's good half-done is a steak.

At least, that's what Dad used to say - and he was right. "Do Your Best" isn't just a good motto for the Boy Scouts. It's a powerful philosophy for living. If you're going to do it, whatever it is, do your best. That doesn't mean you have to be the best there is - just the best you can be.

Even if that eliminates a few shaving cream balloon bombers.

From Where I Sit

Lightning Strikes

by Frank Andrews

I miss the lightning and the lightning just missed me!

The storm that we had in the San Diego area recently had more thunder and lightning with it than I had seen in this area during the nearly 30 years that I have lived here. In fact a loud bolt of lightning hit a tree just a few feet from our bedroom. It split the tree and nearly scared my wife, Willie Marie, to death.

We were lucky to be on high ground so there wasn't any flooding, only a split tree to cut down and haul away. Compared to the hardships (from the storm) of some unfortunate people in this area, we were very lucky.

Storms like our last one affect my wife more than they do me. She is from Oklahoma, the home of the terrible tornados. She has lived through many twisters and can attest to their capabilities. I have visited her home town during a storm alert and it is really something to witness. There is always someone in the block that has invested in a storm cellar. So when the radio gives warning and the city sirens start to whine everybody in town heads for their designated shelter.

The time in the storm cellar is an experience in itself. Mostly Southern Baptists, singing, praying, and eating delicious food that only the Okies can prepare. Besides many staple foods that are already in the shelter for just such an emergency many more goodies are grabbed up in a rush to make a feast. I did enjoy the fellowship and food during the storm but I hurried topside, saying, "Why hide? The Lord knows where I am if he wants me."

Now up in "Swede Country," where I'm from, they also have fierce electric storms but not as often as Oklahoma. Besides a few bomb shelters, built in the 60's during the nuclear bomb scare, there are few havens from the storm. I don't know why, maybe Swedes don't scare easy or they just can't realize how much fun, love, and fellowship can come out of a hole in the ground. The food served up is equally as good as the "Southerners," only with a blandness typical of Scandinavian cooking. Some of the smaller ethnic towns still converse in their native tongue, which is Greek to me.

Whenever there came a big electric rain storm to our suburban area my Dad and I would head out into it. We would end up laying on the old cement steps left from our burned down cottage. Looking up to the Heavens and thanking God for the blessed rain, while the wind and rain pelted our faces. The strong winds would bend to the breaking point the many poplar trees that lined our road.

This last local San Diego storm brought back many fond memories for me of how I enjoyed the flash of lightning and a few seconds later the loud clash of thunder. I do miss it. Storms are universal and command fear in any country or language.

It's the Law

by Georgine Brave, Attorney at Law

Question: If a parent has physical custody, can he/she determine in his/her will who will have the children after death?

Answer: The deceased parent may nominate someone in the will to be the child's guardian after he or she dies. The Probate Court will decide; the court will concentrate on what is best for the child. The Probate Court will consider the deceased parent's wishes, but there is a presumption that the child should go to the other parent. If the child is old enough, usually at least 12 to 14 years old, the child's wishes will be considered.

If there are allegations that the surviving natural parent is not a fit parent, the Probate Investigator will investigate, may visit the home, and decide if the child would be harmed physically or emotionally. If there is any question of the child's safety, a petition may be filed bringing the issue into Juvenile Court.

In the event that the other natural parent has not had a relationship with the child, the court may order reunification therapy: the parent and child are seen by a therapist for as long as it takes for them to be comfortable with each other.

If the surviving parent doesn't want custody, the Probate Court will grant custody to the guardian who was nominated in the will, for example, the grandparents, another relative or friend of the deceased parent. This nominated guardian may win over the surviving natural parent, if the Probate Court determines that it would be in the child's best interest.

In drawing up your will, should you wish to be referred to an attorney specializing in Probate work, call the Lawyer Referral and Information Service at 231-8585. This is a free service provided by the San Diego County Bar Association.

Joe Freed on the Movies

The Best and the Worst of the summer movies

I know what you're thinking ... How could I possibly do a "Best of Summer" list when summer isn't even over yet?

Well, I guess I'm just breaking the rules ... but, after all, I'm a film critic. In accordance with the Film Critic's Association bylaws, I'm difficult, moody and do whatever the heck I want.

The Best

5. "Regarding Henry"

Harrison Ford gives a touching and believable performance as an arrogant attorney who is forced to start his life over again, when a bullet wound to the head erases most of his personality.

Often hilarious and always charming, director Mike Nichols' film is an underrated, yet meaningful, accomplishment.

4. "The Rocketeer"

From the Walt Disney Company, "the Rocketeer" is the blockbuster that should have been. Mixing nifty special effects with a 1930's production design, this family adventure cashes in on pure excitement and appropriately hammy performances. Timothy Dalton, Paul Sorvino and Alan Arkin are great!

3. "Terminator 2"

I've never said "wow" so many times in a two-hour period. Arnold Schwarzenegger and Linda Hamilton ride on a tidal wave of mind-boggling special effects. We're talking about effects so incredible that I don't even want to know how they did it. I'd prefer to live out my days in dumbstruck ignorance. James Cameron directs "T2" to a relentless pace, pulls your heart up into your throat and keeps it there.

2. "Dead Again"

I'm breaking another rule here ... I'm discussing a movie in a recap article when it hasn't even been released yet. But it comes out August 23 (and I have seen it) so I don't want you to miss it. Kenneth Branagh reinforces the possibility that he may very well be the greatest actor in existence. Starring in dual roles (as an American private investigator and a German composer) this Irish-born actor/director develops accent and characterization to perfection. The film focuses on a murder 40 years in the past, and two people who believe they might be the incarnations of both murderer and victim.

1. "The Doctor"

Every once in awhile a motion picture comes along that is without a flaw, and "The Doctor" is such an accomplishment. William Hurt (in a performance worthy of an Academy Award nomination) plays a surgeon who gains insight into the experiences of his patients when he develops a growth on his vocal chords and is treated in his own hospital. The screenplay direction and acting (the supporting cast includes Christine Lahti, Mandy Patinkin and Elizabeth Perkins) are simply excellent.

The Worst

5. "Delirious"

John Candy stars as a writer trapped in his own soap opera ... a funny idea, but a bad film. The jokes are forced and Candy is totally unbelievable in a romantic lead. If you want a laugh, I think real soap operas will entertain you.

4. "Problem Child 2"

Producing this sequel makes about as much sense as going back to the dentist's office the day after a root canal. I think I've had enough of inane, ridiculous movies about cute little kids. "Problem Child 2" is predictable, precocious and a waste of money.

3. "Life Stinks"

... And so does this lame comedy from Mel Brooks. It's the story of a millionaire businessman who bets a rival he can live a month on the street without his cash or connections. The film does have one or two moments that made me giggle, but the jokes usually misfire or just aren't that funny.

2. "V.I. Warshawski"

Disney's troubled Hollywood Pictures division continues its losing streak with a two-hour cliché about a tough private investigator. It's true they made the hero a woman (Kathleen Turner) instead of a man, but when you're watching cinematic rehash, the sex of the protagonist really doesn't matter. Boring is boring.

1. "Point Break"

I've seen a load of ridiculous movies in my day, but this takes the cake. A gang of skydiving philosopher-surfers rob banks to finance their summer fun. That is until ex-football stud, FBI dude, Johnny Utah comes after them. It's 85 percent surf and 15 percent gun play - that leaves zero percent for plot.

'The Invisible Ogre' should be seen

There is a cat in high boots and a fancy hat, an oversized king, a gorgeous princess, a dog who sounds a great deal like the Cowardly Lion of Oz, and a handsome hero who masquerades as a Count. There is also a witch whose incantations occasionally take on a modern ring, and a terrible villain who is heard but never seen.

These are only some of the characters now rehearsing for the August 21 opening of the Lamplighter's children's fairy tale, "The Invisible Ogre," at the Mabel Bryan Amphitheatre in Harry Griffen Park.

Rehearsals for a children's play enacted by adults are different from the more serious workouts involved in adult drama. Above all, silliness reigns, because the combination of silliness and adventure seems to be the best menu for very youthful playgoers. The King and his court prance around the stage on broomstick horses as they go on the "Royal hunt." The cat and dog mock hiss and bark at each other and the beautiful princess is instantly smitten by the handsome hero. All is rehearsed with much laughter and instant innovation designed to tease the fantasies of the audience.

As in all good children's plays, there are planned efforts at involving the youngsters. Cast members ask questions of the audience and elicit answers which speed the action. When these lines are done in rehearsals, all cast and crew sitting around shout back the answers in children's voices.

Directed by Carol Brown and Jack Holden, it is relatively relaxed and good natured. When Trenton Shine who plays the king snaps his fingers in mock fun at a given line, cast and director shout, "leave it in, it looks great." When Newt Paletz, portraying the dog, adds new nuances to his growl, rehearsal stops as actors "break up" with laughter.

Lori Lewis, as "Puss in Boots," squares off with Newt Paletz's dog in an early rehearsal of "The Invisible Ogre."

Lori Lewis sits patiently for makeup artist Dana York to do a cat face.

For the Lamplighter's Theatre, "The Invisible Ogre" marks a return to children's theatre after several years absence. Except for "The Cat in the Castle" of several years ago, it's been a dozen years since the La Mesa theatre group has essayed a "for children" production. The forthcoming experiment with the outdoor venue at Harry Griffen Park, if successful, will herald a regular annual summer season of children's theatre provided by Lamplighters.

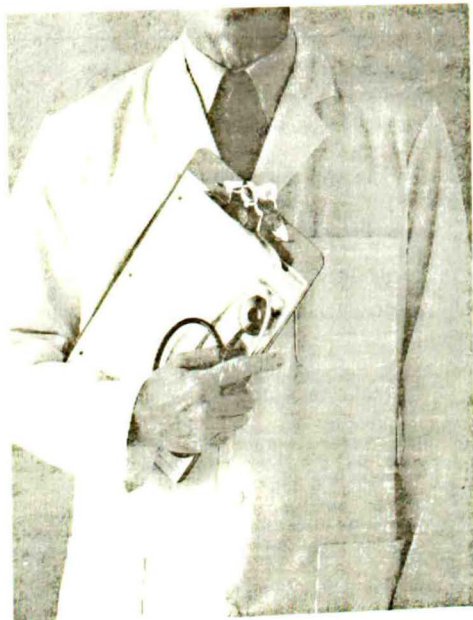

"The Invisible Ogre" will run for six evenings: August 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, and 30, starting at 6 p.m. Admission is free and families are encouraged to bring picnics to the amphitheater for a relaxed evening of fun.
